

(3) The Magic of a Kind Heart

Deep in the heart of the beautiful Land of Everglow, there stood a grand castle made of shining glass. For many long centuries, this land was the most radiant place on the earth. The grass was always a vibrant green, and the flowers sang sweet songs when the wind whispered through them.

One morning, a strange and cold shadow suddenly fell over the kingdom. The bright red roses faded into gray, and the blue sky looked like old, dusty paper. King Thomas stood on his balcony with a heavy heart while his voice was shaking with great fear. He looked at his garden and very loudly cried:

"The colors are vanishing and the music has died! We must find a way to fix the crystal now to save us all!"

The worried King called the Great Wizard, Oliver, who wore a purple robe with a silver star. Oliver held his golden wand tightly in his hand. He looked at the King and declared:

"Do not be afraid, Majesty. My spells always work. I will bring back the light with my magic words very soon!"

Oliver entered the dark room and said magic words for many hours. He tried to put bright energy into the stone. But the crystal stayed dark and silent. He finally fell to the floor and sighed:

"It is impossible. The crystal is still cold. My magic is not strong enough to break this thick and dark shadow."

Then Sir Brave, the strongest royal knight, walked forward with a heavy step. His steel armor clanked loudly. He looked at the King and boasted:

"Wizards only use words, but I use action! I will find a new sun for our beautiful world using my strength!"

Days later, the brave knight returned with thick dust on his boots. He searched on the high mountains and in deep caves. He bowed his head and said:

"I searched the whole world, Majesty. But I cannot find a power stronger than our old crystal. I failed you completely."

Princess Mia, the youngest daughter, had been watching everything from the castle. She was not a wizard and she was not a soldier. Mia went into the village, helped a lady and told the children:

"Do not be sad. Let us play together and remember how to laugh again because happiness is very important for us."

As Mia shared her kindness, a light appeared. Mia saw the truth and whispered:

"The crystal is just a magic mirror of our hearts."

Slowly, the crystal began to glow. The King and the Wizard were surprised and asked:

"How did you do this without magic or a horse?"

Mia replied:

"Magic lives in our hearts. Caring for others keeps it bright."

From that day on, the land was never gray again. Everyone learned an important lesson about love. They learned that kindness is the most powerful magic because it can bring light to the dark. They will never forget it.
